

Protecting greenery, trees and soil during construction activities

During construction activities, the soil and therefore the life in it can be covered to protect it against compaction due to traffic. Trees can be protected with planks and by fences that protect parts of the construction site which do not need to be used urgently.

